|         | Please summarize the ways in which your course includes DEI. | No value        | The Introduction to African American Studies course at De Anza College incorporates Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion (DEI) across its course description, assignments, primary texts, instructional methods, evaluation strategies, and outline because DEI principles are foundational to the field itself. African American Studies emerged from historical struggles against racial inequality and exclusion, and its central purpose is to examine the social, political, cultural, and economic experiences of African Americans within systems shaped by race, power, and inequality. Including DEI in the course description clearly communicates the course's focus on marginalized histories, structural inequities, and inclusive perspectives. Assignments are designed to promote critical thinking, self-reflection, and engagement with diverse viewpoints, allowing students to analyze inequity while connecting scholarship to lived experience. Primary texts center African American voices and interdisciplinary scholarship that challenge dominant narratives and elevate historically excluded perspectives. The methods of instruction emphasize inclusive pedagogy, such as discussion, collaborative learning, and culturally responsive teaching to support diverse learning styles and foster respectful dialogue. Methods of evaluation are structured to assess students' understanding equitably, valuing multiple forms of knowledge production and expression. Finally, the course outline systematically integrates DEI themes to ensure students gain a comprehensive understanding of African American history and culture within broader social contexts. Overall, the integration of DEI reflects both the academic integrity of African American Studies as a discipline and De Anza College's mission to promote equity, social justice, and inclusive excellence in higher education. |

Title 5 requirements ask that faculty check to see if there is a representative (appropriate) OER textbook, and if so, to include it if possible. If there are no representative OER options, consider zero textbook cost (ZTC) options or otherwise cost conscious options. Textbooks are considered low cost at De Anza if they are under $50.00. If there is no representative OER textbook, please let me know in the instructor response box. Please also let me know if your textbook is low cost (i.e., under $50.00), and consider adding this information to the DEI Box if appropriate. This will satisfy the required component of this edit. |

|         | Please summarize the ways in which your course includes DEI. | No value        | In Forensic anthropology students examine diverse perspectives from around the world and analyze how cultural context influences crime scene investigation, missing person identification, human rights, and humanitarian investigations. Students analyze multiple anthropological perspectives—including those of women, minorities, subaltern groups, and non-Western scholars. The course incorporates a diverse curriculum and teaching pedagogy to examine how forensic work has historically marginalized BIPOC (Black, Indigenous, and People of Color) individuals. They investigate global, cross-cultural and local data related to skeletal remains and apply to forensic investigation and identification. Forensic anthropology like any other anthropology course is rooted in diversity, inclusion and equity. Students will leave with a better understanding of how a bio-cultural context and environment influences forensics and will investigate them in the context of global, national and local issues. They will analyze multiple anthropological perspectives—including those of women, minorities, subaltern groups, and non-Western scholars—to evaluate crime scene investigations, missing person identification and human rights issues. The course uses varied methods of instruction to address diverse learning styles of students. The assignments also give an opportunity to students to showcase their learning and mastery of the subject matter. For example, they could develop an exhibit for display in the anthropology space which could also serve as an outreach and in-reach. Students get to choose the community and topic in forensic anthropology they want to investigate / research , with an opportunity to revise, and where appropriate examples of fieldwork / term papers will be provided. Required

Thanks for providing this example of primary texts and references. Are there representative OER options? Title 5 requirements ask that faculty check to see if there is a representative (appropriate) OER textbook, and if so, to include it if possible. If there is no representative OER textbook, please let me know in the initiator response box. There is no OER available for the course and the text book if used is low cost.

If there are no representative OER options, consider zero textbook cost (ZTC) options or otherwise cost conscious options. Textbooks are considered low cost at De Anza if they are under $50.00. Please also let me know in the initiator response box if your textbook is low cost, and consider adding this information to the DEI Box if appropriate. This will satisfy the required component of this edit.

| !       | Course Description | Medical anthropology seeks to understand how health, illness and healing practices are culturally constructed and mediated. Students will investigate global, cross-cultural and local issues related to health, sickness, healing, epidemiology, aging and dying from an applied and bio-cultural perspective, using anthropological theory and ethnographic fieldwork methods. Students will be exposed to diverse cultural interpretations of health, sickness and healing, the importance of viewing medical systems as social systems, understanding the socio-cultural context of medical decision making and therapy management, the principles of cultural competency, and the recurrent and ongoing problems of socioeconomic inequality and ecological disruptions that have an impact upon the differential distribution and treatment of human diseases. | Medical anthropology seeks to understand how health, illness and healing practices are culturally constructed and mediated. |         | Please summarize the ways in which your course includes DEI. | No value        | Medical anthropology requires students to compare biomedical, folk, indigenous, and cross-cultural healing systems; evaluate competing theories of disease causation; and understand how gender, race, ethnicity, and inequality shape health outcomes. Students will leave with a better understanding of diverse perspectives from around the world and analyze how cultural context influences medical beliefs, practices, and power dynamics. Students analyze multiple anthropological perspectives—including those of women, minorities, subaltern groups, and non-Western scholars—to evaluate definitions of illness, healing, biomedicine, and health disparities. Students will investigate global, cross-cultural and local issues related to health, sickness, healing. The course uses varied methods of instruction to address diverse learning styles. The assignments also give an opportunity to students to showcase their learning and mastery of the subject matter. For example, they could develop an exhibit for display in the anthropology space and could also serve as an outreach and in-reach. Students get to choose the community and topic in health and disease they want to investigate / research , with an opportunity to revise and where appropriate examples of fieldwork / term papers will be provided. They analyze multiple anthropological perspectives—including those of women, minorities, subaltern groups, and non-Western scholars—to evaluate definitions of illness, healing, biomedicine, and health disparities. These tasks require comprehension of sophisticated, culturally diverse academic discourse. Course Outline: B |

| !       | Objective 2:Compose essays drawn from personal experience and assigned texts.                      | No Value        | Students write analytical essays and reflection papers comparing their own experiences of health, illness, or medical systems with ethnographic readings. They integrate course texts, theoretical frameworks, and cross-cultural examples to explain medical systems, disease theories, gendered health experiences, and structural inequalities. These assignments combine personal insight with evidence-based anthropological analysis. Course Outline: F                        |
| !       | Objective 3:Utilize MLA guidelines to format essays, cite sources, and compile a works cited page. | No Value        | Major writing assignments require proper citation of ethnographies, case studies, and academic sources in MLA format. Students must incorporate in-text citations when discussing authors, cultural examples, and medical anthropological theories. All written work includes a Works Cited page, ensuring students correctly apply MLA conventions throughout the course. Assignments C: Writing                                                                                    |
| !       | Objective 4:Create syntactically varied sentences that are free of mechanical errors.              | No Value        | Students produce clear, well-edited written assignments, including short essays, discussion posts, and ethnographic reflections. Effective communication is essential for analyzing culturally grounded medical systems, explaining anthropological theories, and presenting cross-cultural comparisons. Strong sentence structure and control of grammar are required to articulate complex ideas about health, inequality, culture, and healing traditions. Assignments C: Writing |

|  | Objective 5: Distinguish, compare, and evaluate the multiplicity and ambiguity of perspectives. | No Value        | Medical anthropology requires students to compare biomedical, folk, indigenous, and cross-cultural healing systems; evaluate competing theories of disease causation; and understand how gender, race, ethnicity, and inequality shape health outcomes. Students examine diverse perspectives from around the world and analyze how cultural context influences medical beliefs, practices, and power dynamics. The course emphasizes critical thinking about multiple, sometimes conflicting viewpoints—central to anthropological analysis. Course Outline: D |

| !       | Course Description       | This course is an introduction to the syntax and semantics of the x86 processor assembly language, standard instruction set, selected macros and directives, and x86 architecture. | This course provides an introduction to the internal organization and operation of computers, exploring how software and hardware interact at the machine level. Students will program in assembly and C languages to understand how high-level language constructs translate to machine-level operations. Topics include number systems and data representation, direct and indirect memory access and memory management, function calls and the stack, basic computer logic design, processor architecture, and support for operating system functions such as I/O, interrupts, and process switching. Through hands-on programming and analysis, students will examine the fundamental tradeoffs involved in architectural design decisions. This course helps students develop a deeper understanding of how computers execute programs, write more efficient code, debug complex issues, and build a strong foundation for careers in systems programming, embedded systems, and computer architecture. |

Modify and assemble sample programs using MASM; link object code with other library object code; use the debugger to step through instructions and watch memory and register content; explore different memory models; evaluate boolean operations2. Define data of different data types; work with data representation in binary, octal, decimal, hexadecimal; save data in memory vs. registers; define constants; data transfer instructions3. Code arithmetic instructions; observe flags that are set; interpret the result based on the flags; differentiate between signed and unsigned data4. Call library procedures to implement basic data IO; define and call macros to simplify code for IO and basic operations5. Write conditional jump, loop, unconditional jump, compare instructions to implement high level language constructs such as for loop, while loop, if statement6. Write bit-wise instructions for boolean operation and test bits and use the result for conditional processing; use bit-wise operation for shift and rotate of signed and unsigned data7. Code data related operators and directives to work with arrays and structures; use indirect addressing modes: direct offset addressing, register indirect addressing, base index addressing, and base index with displacement addressing to access different types of data structures8. Write stack instructions to manage the run time stack for procedure calls; set the base pointer to the stack frame to access data on the run time stack; set up the stack frame during the procedure call; clean up the stack frame during the procedure return9. Write procedures that pass parameters through registers and through the stack; implement procedures that pass data by address; implement re-entrant procedures10. Technical problem solving is the goal of the course so oral or visual presentation is not usually used for an assignment. |

Expectations for students are clear: they need to be able to correctly analyze architectural or algorithmic designs, and produce code that completely and efficiently solves technical problems. Students can see examples of successful code in the class notes, textbooks, and class discussions. NA. Inequities, racism, and other barriers are typically not discussed as part of computer architecture or programming topics. Since this is at least the third programming course that students take, the textbooks and material dive straight into technical details from the first week. |

If not appropriate, just let me know by writing NA in the initiator response box. Additionally, for any evaluation methods, do instructors provide examples of strong and/or successful assignments to clarify expectations for all students? If yes, consider noting this for the relevant assignment. |   |                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        |

| !       | Course Description       | This course emphasizes foundation technologies in C# that enable you to write server-side programs in C#. Concepts include inner classes, collections, exceptions, file I/O, reflections, cloning, and multithreading. | This advanced course takes your C# programming skills to the next level by applying them to real-world, professional-grade software development. You'll deepen your expertise in object-oriented design and server-side programming while working with powerful concepts like inner classes, collections, exceptions, file I/O, reflection, cloning, and multithreading. Through hands-on projects, you'll learn to write reliable, maintainable, and scalable code, and strengthen the collaborative problem-solving skills that today's software teams rely on. |

|         | Please summarize the ways in which your course includes DEI. | No value        | This course is committed to Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion by fostering a learning environment where every student feels welcomed, respected, and equipped to succeed. Course materials, examples, and projects intentionally reflect diverse perspectives and real-world contexts, while instructional methods are designed to support varied learning styles, backgrounds, and levels of experience. Assessments are transparent, fair, and focused on student growth, ensuring that all learners—regardless of identity, lived experience, or prior preparation—have equitable opportunities to fully participate, master the material, and thrive in the course. The course is further structured in alignment with Universal Design for Learning principles by providing multiple means of engagement, representation, and expression. Course materials use accessible language, clearly define programming terminology, and reflect diverse perspectives within contemporary software development practice. |

If the requisite does not fall under an A-F Matrix is being retained/added, download the Content Review Matrix G from the Reference Materials, and follow the remaining instructions on the form. Reminder that: an “OR” conjunction statement requires ONE representative G-Matrix; an “AND” conjunction statement requires a separate G-Matrix for EACH course.

Please summarize the ways in which your course includes DEI.

No value

Course study material will be varied (video, readings, discussions); students have an opportunity to comment and provide feedback on exams and homework; homework submission and discussions will allow different types (written, video, oral) where appropriate to show apprehension. The course also uses no cost OER textbooks and materials that reflect community concerns and challenges.

Please check all areas in the COR that address DEI.

Are there representative OER options? Title 5 requirements ask that faculty check to see if there is a representative (appropriate) OER textbook, and if so, to include it if possible. If there is no representative OER textbook, please let me know in the initiator response box. This will satisfy the required component of this edit. Do Examples of Primary Texts and References meet universal design course standards (accessible and inclusive language, explanations of technical terms, etc.), and do they reflect diverse authors, voices, and perspectives, and discuss current debates in the field that are relevant to students? If so, let me know in the Initiator response box, and consider adding this to the DEI statement. | YThree of the texts listed are OER options available through the College Library. |

|                      | Course Justification | This course meets a general education requirement for De Anza and Cal-GETC and transfers to the CSU and UC Systems. As the first of two advanced composition classes in the ESL Program, it equips students with critical skills in analyzing college-level texts and writing cogent argumentative essays. The course also introduces students to research and library databases to help develop academic skills in using sources. Intra-campus research has shown that students are more successful in English Writing and General Education courses after passing this course. | This course meets a general education requirement for De Anza and Cal-GETC and transfers to the CSU and UC Systems. As the first of two advanced composition classes in the ESL Program, it It equips students with critical skills in analyzing college-level texts and writing cogent argumentative essays. Students engage with readings that reflect varied cultural, ethnic, gender, sexual, and socio-economic perspectives while developing college-level academic writing skills and examining their own multilingual identities. Assignments allow students to select meaningful topics connected to their own experiences. Furthermore, assignments include opportunities for peer feedback and revision to change title only. -mkct encourage students to view writing as a process and a vehicle for critical thinking. The course also allows for various no-cost and OER materials to increase accessibility and reduce financial barriers. |
